RECORDED DEATHS OF 1845-1846

adventurers; they entered into ruinous bargains, and had not even funds enough to take the smallest number of those whom they had induced to join them, to the place of the settlement. . . . Prince Solms retired in 1845 to Germany. The Association appointed John O. Meusebach to succeed the prince as Commissioner General for the Association, in Texas. Meusebach was a most energetic and high-gifted man, fully competent for the fearful responsibility of his duties, and, for his exertions, talent, and courage, justly honored by the Americans. He was, however, calumniated and persecuted by the colonists themselves. He succeeded in establishing a second settlement, Fredericksburg. He made an exploring excursion into the Fisher tract, entered into advantageous treaties with the Indians, and secured the aid and assistance of all the inhabitants. It may be justly said that whatever good has been done by the Association was performed by Meusebach. This is, it appears, also at present acknowledged by the Germans. They helped, in 1852, to elect him to the Senate."⁷

Hermann Seele, on Christmas morning of 1849, going horseback out to the Orphan Farm, described a row of graves at edge of Comaltown "in which rest the remains of immigrants who here in the far West died on the bank of the Comal, without having reached the promised land. They were of the first settlers of Comaltown in 1846. The caskets, because of the stony soil, could only be interred shallowly so that often, pious hands passing by there, would cover up the washed-out grave tops with stone slabs."⁸
